Council for Exceptional Children Students Show Their Smarts at Conference

February 23, 2018

Quick Facts

- Chapter President Madison Grant, of Camden, South Carolina, said she and her peers endured two rounds of 25 questions.
- Winthrop's chapter currently boasts 28 members. Any Winthrop student can join the chapter after paying the $5 registration fee.

ROCK HILL, SOUTH CAROLINA Winthrop University continuously reviews and updates its special education program to make sure it's meeting the needs of the ever-changing profession. Students in the program have access to many hands-on opportunities, including Study Abroad and the university's Council for Exceptional Children (CEC) chapter.

That diligent work was fully displayed this month when Winthrop's chapter placed first at the South Carolina CEC Annual Conference College Bowl, defeating other state schools such as Clemson University and Coastal Carolina University.

Chapter President Madison Grant, of Camden, South Carolina, said she and her peers endured two rounds of 25 questions. Topics included special education federal laws, evidence-based practices, disability characteristics and pre-school disabilities.

Winthrop's chapter currently boasts 28 members. Any Winthrop student can join the chapter after paying the $5 registration fee. The group typically meets once a month.

For more information, contact chapter advisor Deb Leach at 803/323-4760 or leachd@winthrop.edu.
